BRITISH PATRIOT. ISSUE NO. SIX. JULY 1993. EDITOR. MARK COTTERILL.

Welcome to issue six of the new look, BRITISH PATRIOT, now twelve pages long. As you will see about 50% of this issue has been done on our new Desk Top computer, with the rest being done on the 'good old' electric typewriter. Issue seven, which we hope to get out in just under two months time, will be produced on the computer completely. Many thanks to George, for all his help here.

Thankyou to everyone who sent in articles (keep them coming). Sorry to Stan Webb and Darren Copeland, but we just did not have room in this issue for the articles you sent in. However they will go in our next issue. Please also keep sending in press cuttings, letters and photo's (black & white is best).

We also need donations, to keep both the PATRIOTIC FORUM and BRITISH PATRIOT going and many thanks to all those of you who sent in something over the last two months. Please keep those donations coming in, however large or small it all helps in the fight to win our Country back.

The recent speech by Manchester MP Winston Churchill, on immigration and its problems in our major cities, was welcomed by all real Conservatives and Patriots. Despite the attack by John Major and the Tory Party leadership on him Winston Churchill stuck to his guns and did not back down to them, or the Left Wing press, who branded him a "racist". Without a doubt, Winston Churchill voiced the feelings of most British people, who know their homeland is under threat, from over 50,000 new immigrants each year. The PATRIOTIC FORUM salute Winston Churchill, for getting immigration back on to the agenda in the UK, as it is already in most Western European Countrys. Full report in next issue.

Despite the vote in the House of Commons and the result of the second Danish referendum, the battle against Maastricht and a Federal Europe goes on. Over 40 Tory MP's had the guts to vote against this much-hated Treaty and polls show 80-90% of Britons would vote 'NO' if they were allowed a vote. Europe remains completely split on this issue, which is not going to go away for a very long time. The PATRIOTIC FORUM will continue to campaign against Maastricht, European Union and the Common Market. We are British and we wish to stay that way and we will fight every inch of the way to stay Independent.

Finally as we approach the 12th July, which is a time for celebration for all British Patriots, let us not forget our fellow Brits in Ulster, who have to live in siege conditions day in day out. We are with you all the way.

EIRE SHELTERS HER DADDY'S KILLER

BY S.BRADY.

Little Honor Westmacott is 13 now. She doesn't remember her Daddy. But she knows he was a very brave man. Captain Richard Westmacott of the Special Air Service was murdered by the IRA when his daughter was only six months old. They gave Honor's dad the Military Cross posthumously for his bravery in the battle against the Provoes' notorious "M60 Gang" in which he fell. And they got one of the terrorists who killed him, one Angelo Fusco, and gave him three life sentences.

The only trouble is that, thanks to our "European Community partner" and "friendly neighbour" the Irish Republic, the scumbag who murdered Honor's daddy never served a day of those sentences. In fact, he spends his days fishing for salmon in the clear streams of County Kerry, and his nights at home in Tralee with his wife and two children. Children who, unlike Honor Westmacott, see their daddy every day. The Irish authorities know where he is, in fact he checks in at an Irish Police station every day. And they know he escaped from Belfast's Crumlin Road jail in 1981 and is wanted back there to serve his murder sentences. Murders he admits openly having committed. Gunning down Honor's daddy was "a necessary evil", he callously remarked recently. Before going to Tralee to address the Provisional Sinn Fein Easter Rising rally. Where he was hailed as a hero.

While Honor grows up without ever knowing her father, the vermin who killed him walks free. For 15 months extradition proceedings have rolled half-heartedly through the Irish courts. The seriousness with which the Republic takes extraditing the selfconfessed murderer of a British officer is clear from the decision of their Mr "Justice" Paul Carney to let him walk free on bail.

So far IRA man Fusco just puts in a bit of salmon fishing and basks in the applause at IRA "political wing" rallies. But one of his accomplices in murdering Captain Westmacott, Paul "Dingus" Magee, also released on bail by the Irish courts while they stalled extradition proceedings, got bored with that. He sneaked into Britain last summer and stable in Yorkshire. Fortunately we murdered an unarmed Special Con got him, and this time he really will serve life for that and for Capt.

Westmacott's murder. But as long as his mate Fusco stays put in Eire, he's safe from justice.

Irish President Mary Robinson, personally by all accounts a decent sort, visited London last month. She met H.M. the Queen. But she didn't meet Honor Westmacott. Perhaps she should have done. Because then this little English girl could have asked the nice Irish lady why her Government protects the man who murdered her daddy...

EL DORADO THE PROMISED LAND ?

Conspiracy theories are best avoided, because of where they so often lead, but anyone examining the post war history of our Islands cannot help noticing a pattern to what is going on.

Not only has somebody been very eager to fill this small nation with as wide an assortment of ethnic groups as possible, but they also seem very keen to encourage as many of us native Britons to leave as possible. We are constantly being told, by the massed media that there is a better life to be had elsewhere.

It used to be Australia of course. A lot of time and money has been expended convincing us that the antipodes were a sort of promised land for whites. Everything in Australia was perfect. The people were full of vim and vitality not like us 'whinging poms'. If we were to believe the hype it did not even rain in Australia. To prove it the television bombarded us with Rolf Harris, Skippy The Flying Doctor and countless others.

Conversely everything in Britain was bad, especially the weather. Stay at home Brits were spineless, unhealthy, work shy, dishonest etc. You only had to watch Coronation Street to see the proof. It is strange though that the millions of immigrants who at the same time were eagerly flocking into Britain seem to have been given the opposite impression. For them Britain was the promised land. One of the first West Indians I ever encountered assured me quite calmly and without rancour that "You people are finished here, this will be our country now". The only hope for any of us was Australia.

That was in the Sixties. Things have changed since then. The Asian countries were unhappy about the idea of an almost exclusively Anglo-Saxon stronghold, right on their doorsteps. Measures are now being taken to adjust the ethnic 'balance' of Australia and sever ties with the homeland. They will no longer accept our discontented and dispossessed surplus population.

So the problem has arisen as to just where to send the growing numbers of us Brits who are finding that there is just no room for them here. As usual we only have to switch on the television to find out. Where else but 'El Dorado'? Or maybe Provence ? All Soap Operas are social propaganda of course, some more than others. We are encouraged to identify with the characters (or stereo-types) and their everyday problems. The message is always there, not too subtly hidden for us to miss, and we are expected to modify our attitudes, if not our behaviour, accordingly.

As to the natives of El Dorado; well I know what my feelings would be if a large group of foreigners moved into my neighbourhood and started ordering things the way they wanted, behaving as if they owned the place and refusing even to speak my language. I would not blame any Spaniard who felt the same about a crowd of Brits taking over the place.

All this is consistent with the great 'ideal' of a united Europe. A Europe with out national borders. A nice, uniform grey melting pot Europe, where the distinctive national characters and cultures which made up European civilisation, have ceased to be of any relevance. A Europe where you do not even have to be European!

This is our land. We should not be so ready to give up our claim on what countless generations of our ancestors have striven to build. Go onto Dartmoor and look at the ancient stone monuments there. Your ancestors build them, they are part of you. Be proud of what you are! Do not be cheated out of your inheritance !.

Britain a Nation

LET'S SAY "NO" TO EUROPE (PART TWO)

- BY COLIN BURGES.

Britain's natural trading patterns have been distorted, especially in agriculture. Cheap food imports from the outside world have been replaced by very expensive European substitutes. What sort of crackpot argument is it that manages to make this sound beneficial?

Britain is unique in having descendants of her people dispersed more widely over the globe than any other race, mostly in her 'daughter' nations of Canada, Australia and New Zealand. Although these former dominions have achieved independence and are now developing without any regard for their 'mother' country, there exists an enormous fund of goodwill; even if this is not reflected by their leaderships and the wretched media.

Often we hear about our 'special relationship' with the USA - which does not in fact exist (although it should) - but we seldom hear about our kith and kin in the old Dominions. When we do, it is usually news of a another break in their ties with us. This should be received with dismay, instead of the delight customary among the British media, because it is with these people that we should enjoy a truly special relationship.

Even without this blood bond, it would make more sense to trade with the old Dominions because they have economies largely the opposite of Britain's. They are primarily exporters of minerals, raw materials and foodstuffs and only import finished goods. If we were to secede from Europe and progressively re-establish our manufacturing capacity, we would be the perfect match for the other partners of a 'New Commonwealth' - as it might be called - because our economies would be complementary.

Of course, we are not talking about recreating the Empire. Rightly or wrongly, we have retired from imperialism. What we suggest is a close co-operation between independent nation states sharing a common descent, language and culture, and having mutual economic interests.

In the countries mentioned, there is the means to produce almost every raw material and every commodity we require, not only in abundance, but in complete isolation 'from world supply or world speculation. By a system of 'Commonwealth Preference', exports from Canada, Australia and New Zealand would find easy and guaranteed entry into Great Britain, in exchange for their preference for our manufactured goods. These would always be more competitive than their own by reason of our dense population and enormous home market.

As far as possible, a trading bloc would be established which would provide insulation - not 'protection', in the economic sense - from world chaos and the tyranny of the 'international' system, with its fat-cat financiers holding no obvious allegiance.

To repair the damage that has been perpetrated since the War would be very difficult indeed. In the case of the countries with which we would like to form the 'New Commonwealth', we have to consider that it was Britain that ditched them in favour of European links, and that since then they have looked elsewhere and formed new associations of their own. Given the right leadership however, a reconciliation would be possible. With to-day's leadership whose outlook is small and defeatist, reconciliation is quite impossible.

Europe is the regular escape route for to-day's class of inept politician. Being unable to make use of the great reservoirs of that creative and inventive genius which presently lie untapped. (to be continued in the next issue).

ONE-Of Many (Postbag, April 8) seems to view the EC and the social charter through rose-coloured spectacles.

The social charter is a blatant confidence trick drawn up not by men of vision and compassion, but by non-elected bankers, financiers, and a powerful elite whose aim is the total control of Europe through a United States of Europe.

If this charter was implemented, the United Kingdom would be subsidising countries like Greece, Italy and Spain, the so-called poor countries of Europe, in the same way that money from Britain is poured into Eire at present.

No wonder the rest of the EC has accepted the social charter with open arms.

The real cost to Britain would be bankruptcies, firms going under and even higher unemployment.

One Of Many's pension would not be worth very much then.

ARE THE LIBERAL DEMOCRATS ALL BAD ?

BY JAMES HAMILTON
CAVENDISH.

A radical-Right member of the Conservative and Unionist Party, says Ashdown is a one-world liberal, but do his followers really share his views ?

To every right-thinking Conservative there is nothing worse than a party political broadcast by 'Lib-Dem' leader Paddy Ashdown. The "holier-than-thou" tone the self-importance, the hypocrisy of the man, all are absolutely insufferable. His policies are just as bad: total commitment to a European Superstate; more aid to the Third World; unrestricted immigration; a British passport to every citizen of Hong Kong; and the creation of an all-Ireland Republic. But at grass-roots level, the ordinary Liberal Democrat probably does not even know what his national party stands for. Out in the provinces, Lib Dem volunteers and councillors fight for things such as better schools, more public amenities, safer streets, more police on the beat, more scrutiny of what the local town hall is up to, and so on. Most of them are sceptical about Europe, worried about the lack of democracy and openness at the heart of the Delors "vision". Although not flag-waving nationalists, the Lib Dems respect the culture of our regions and that is why they have so much support in places like Cornwall and Wales, as well as parts of Scotland.

These political instincts reflect common-sense and are free of typical party dogma - little wonder that the Lib Dems score effectively in local elections. Yet I wonder what would happen if Paddy Ashdown's Hong Kong millions settled in Wales or Cornwall ? How would local Lib Dems, who believe in defending local identity, respond to the policies of their leader ? And what would happen if the EC took responsibility for local and regional government - how could Paddy Ashdown's councillors continue to support their leader's pro-EC policies ?

Europe and Hong Kong will be big issues throughout the 1990's, and these and other issues will pose problems for the Liberal Democrats. I wonder how many disaffected councillors and party workers we will be able to recruit...

EAST KENT PATRIOTIC FORUM CELEBRATES EMPIRE DAY

By Alan Harvey

On May 24th the East Kent Branch of the PATRIOTIC FORUM marked Empire Day with a special celebration at a public house in Whitstable.

Up until the early-1950's Empire Day was celebrated with gusto throughout the length and breadth of not only the United Kingdom itself, but also the, British populated dominions and our imperial possessions overseas. Marches and parades to celebrate British imperial glory would take place in every centre of population of Britain, the Empire and the White dominions, and children would all be given a half day's holiday.

Alas Empire Day was one of the first victims of "political correctness", and following the treasonable surrender of our overseas colonies this day of celebration quickly fell into disuse.

Our colleagues in New Zealand have been reviving the tradition over the past few years however, and thanks to their example the PATRIOTIC FORUM has also now resumed the commemorations. This year's event may have been a little low-key, but in future the aim is to stage such activities on a far larger scale and at various points throughout the United Kingdom.

The "abolition" of Empire Day may have been one of the first examples of the old "political correctness", but with the present upsurge of White national patriotism in Eastern Europe, and with the growing opposition to non-White immigration in Western Europe and the United Kingdom, its restoration by the PATRIOTIC FORUM may be one of the first signs of the ascendancy of a "new political correctness"!

TELEPHONE REFERENDUM

On 6 May Lady Thatcher announced the result of this very successful poll to the Jubilee Room of the House of Commons which was full to overflowing with cameras and journalists. Reports of the results and Baroness Thatcher's speech appeared on all TV news bulletins that evening and in Daily papers the following day. Out of over 55,000 validated votes only 6% were in favour of the Maastricht Treaty!

THE FLYING SQUAD: The Anti-Federal Europe "Flying Squad", ended their campaign of days of action against Maastricht, with visits to Torquay, Newbury (3 times) and Gloucester. In Torquay they were joined by local PF and CIB members, although the 3 local CIB organisers were unable to attend, and also a group of CIB members from Essex. A record number of signatures were collected from local people, calling for a Referendum on the Maastricht Treaty and thousands of leaflets were handed out.

The Newbury By-Election, created an ideal opportunity for the "Flying Squad" to flood the town with anti-Federal Europe and Patriotic literature, in the 3 weeks leading up Election Day. The days of action ended (for the time being) at Gloucester on May 15th, where many more signatures were collected and many more leaflets handed out. The only trouble came from a group of young 'local' West Indians who attempted to steal the Union Jack Flags and collecting tins - without success !

It is hoped that the days of action, will start up again soon and readers who wish to help should contact our office for details, or Melvyn Rendell for the Midlands area on; 0452 712217. Or David Moon for the London/Essex area on; 0206 397196. Or for the North of England CIB North West Branch on; 0625 878142.

ULSTER NEEDS YOU

At the end of March, I travelled over to Ulster with a colleague, for a long weekend of fact-finding. We stayed in the heart of Loyalist East Belfast, at a very pleasant Bed and Breakfast, but managed to see much more of the place than we thought we could, in such a short time.

Our first evening was spent with a group of locals, in some of the many Inns along the Newtownards Road. Here we were able to talk 'politics' with people who were just as Patriotic as ourselves, if not more so. It was good to hear what the 'ordinary man in the street' had to say and we learnt a great deal.

The following morning, we went by train from Belfast Central station, to the boarder town of Newry in County Down. Here we met up with a local Loyalist who was to be both our guide and driver for most of the day. Although I had been over to Ulster many times before, this was my first visit to the Newry area and I was very much looking forward to it.

What surprised us both the most, was how strong the support for the IRA and the Republican movement was in this area. It seemed like every where we went there were IRA slogans painted on walls and Irish tricolour flags flying. We could not even stop for a drink or bite to eat in this area, as our guide warned us, we would be made most unwelcome !

So we had to be content with a bit of 'sight-seeing' from the safety of our guides car. Even in there though we were not all that safe, because the IRA tend to set up their own road blocks in this area. As it happened we did not run into any of them.

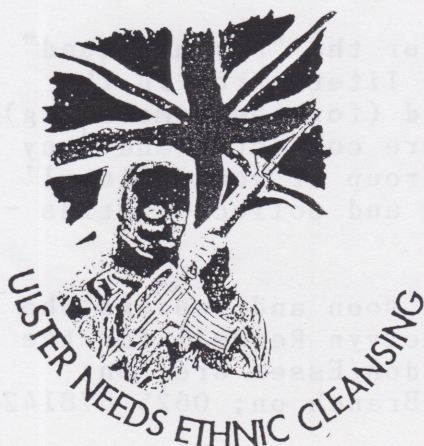

Along the Ulster - Irish boarder in County Down, it is hard to tell which Country you are in ! There are only things like signs in Galic, to show you are in The South, that give the game away, otherwise you just do not know.

B.P. Editor Mark Cotterill in the 'Shankill' West Belfast.

Our guide made a point of taking us into the South, to show us the spot from where the IRA launched their cowardly attack on Warrenpoint, in 1979, where a large number of young British soldiers were killed, on the same day as the IRA killed Lord Mountbatten. We had a minutes silence in their memory.

It was then north to the town of Armagh, in the County of the same name. We had a quick lunch and a couple of pints of the local brew, in a very friendly public house, before our guide gave us a tour of this market town. We were able to go into and look around Armagh Cethedral, which I can well recommend a visit to, if you are ever in the area.

From Armagh it was north-east to Portadown, which was to be our final 'port of call' for the day. We met up with our guides friend and local Patriotic organiser for the area here - Eddie. Portadown is a very proud Loyalist town, which has gone down many times in the folk-history of Ulster. It is strange to think that after only two months of me walking around the town centre, the IRA would blow the whole place to bits.

WHITE RHINO CLUB SUPPORTS TRADITIONAL MAY FESTIVITIES

On May 3rd the WHITE RHINO CLUB staged a trip to the increasingly popular Rochester Sweeps May Festival.

The Rochester Sweeps Procession dates back to at least 1737, when the chimney sweep boys of the district would parade down the ancient city streets each May Day. Following the passing of the "Climbing Boys Act" of 1888, however, the celebrations quickly fell into extinction - until they were revived in their present form in 1981.

Today, as well as the centre-piece attraction of local youngsters dressed in traditional chimney sweep boy costumes parading through the streets, there is also a weekend-long festival of Morris Dancing, ceilidhs and other forms of indigenous British folk culture.

There was a good contingent of WHITE RHINO CLUB members and supporters present at this year's event, mingling in with a total crowd of several thousand. All enjoyed a most pleasant and inspiring day witnessing this enthralling aspect of our British cultural heritage. The festivities continued well into the evening, and ended with a convivial gathering in one of the city's many historic inns. The WHITE RHINO CLUB is planning an exciting sequence of further events during the forthcoming summer months - not only of a traditional and cultural nature, but also involving more contemporary aspects of the struggle for British racial identity. For more details write to the WHITE RHINO CLUB at: BCM SAPAT, London WCIN 3XX.

AN ANC triple-killer's invitation to attend a Bloody Sunday rally has sparked a bitter row.

Robert MacBride, a black South African activist and a descendant of two famous IRA commanders, was reprieved from death row in 1986 following his conviction for murdering three women in a South African bomb explosion.

Now he's been invited to the Derry rally later this month by a group called the Bloody Sunday Initiative. But the invite has incensed the DUP.

DUP councillor Gregory Campbell said: "It is totally abhorrent that any group should invite someone of this character to represent them."

"It's indicative of them having violence on their agenda. This will confirm in the eyes of the Protestant people that the organisers of the rally have links with republicanism."

Bloody Sunday Init-

By NEIL MACKAY

iative spokesman Tony Doherty said Robert MacBride had been asked over merely to represent the ANC.

"He was released for his crimes as part of the peace negotiations in South Africa."

"He is a man to be respected as he could be a member of the South African government one day."

"Robert was invited over because of his Irish connections and the fact that he is prepared to comment on the on-going situation of conflict in this country - and for no other reason."

Robert MacBride is the great-grandson of John MacBride, a leader of the Irish Brigade who fought against the British in the Boer War and was later executed for his involvement in the 1916 Easter Rising.

He is also the grandson of Sean MacBride, the IRA chief-of-staff in the 1930s.

RIGGED REFERENDUM: DENMARK DISGRACES DEMOCRACY

So Denmark has finally voted for Maastricht. A triumph for democracy? Not quite. For the Danish Maastricht referendum was a disgraceful exercise in bribing, bullying and brainwashing the voters which reflects just how desperate the Euro-federalist fanatics are to ram their super-state down the throats of the peoples of Europe, regardless of their wishes, let alone interests. And it should serve as a warning note to those anti Maastricht campaigners here who think just getting a referendum in the UK would win victory.

The Danish people, like ours, never liked Maastricht from the word go. But, unlike ours, they got the chance to vote on it, a year ago, and, despite the almost unanimous support for the Treaty by the local Great and Good, voted against. As they certainly would here, if a referendum were held tomorrow. But the verdict of the people wasn't the end of it. However they profess to believe in "democracy", those who plan to succeed where Napoleon and Hitler failed and subject the nations of Europe to one central bureaucratic super-state weren't going to let a little matter of a popular vote stand in their way. If the voters vote against their rulers, the voters are wrong, and must do it again until they get it right and do as they are told.

First they were brought back to the starting post by a feeble fudge. The "Edinburgh opt-outs", which supposedly gave the Danes a different Maastricht Treaty to vote on. But which are now universally accepted as legally meaningless. In law, Denmark, like Britain, is bound by the Treaty, the whole Treaty, and nothing but the Treaty.

Then the spur was applied to the electorate to force them to jump the fence between them and federal slavery they refused last time. Seven of the eight parliamentary parties, comprising 90% of MP's, were brought into line to back the Treaty. Only the small patriotic Progress Party listened to and echoed the public against Maastricht, instead of bellowing at them that they must back it or be expelled into outer darkness outside the Common Market (a total lie, and a fate that hasn't harmed Denmark's Scandinavian neighbours any way). The left-wing Socialist People's Party, which had joined the Progress patriots against the treaty last time, turned its coat and joined the "Ja" chorus.

To the politicians' threats that Danes collectively would be "expelled from Europe" if they didn't vote the right way was added the Employers' Federation threatening that Danes individually would lose their jobs if they voted No. As Federation boss Poul Erik Pedersen said "We got the tactics wrong last time and we have learned our lesson". This time factories leafleted their workers at their workplaces with leaflets telling them they faced the dole if they voted no. The trades unions, instead of defending their members against the bosses' threats, simply echoed them and likewise warned workers of "dire consequences" if they voted the wrong way.

To this bullying was added bribery. The Danish Government simply promised the voters a big tax cut if they voted Yes. Only one step physically, and none morally, from having Civil Servants outside the ballot boxes shoving wads of kroner notes into the hands of everyone who turned in a Yes vote!

Finally there was brainwashing. Their readers views may have split 50-50. But 46 of Denmark's 48 newspapers spoke with one voice throughout the campaign calling for a "Yes" vote. As did the TV and radio pundits.

So they got their "Yes" vote on the day. Just as they got ours in the 1975 Common Market referendum. By putting two free "vote yes" booklets (one from the "yes" campaign, one from the Government giving "its view") through every door to one "vote no". By all main party leaderships singing "vote yes" with a unanimity seldom found in the Common's bear garden. A chorus in which TV and Press joined, whilst, as in Denmark this time, those who stood up for national freedom and independence were Portrayed as isolated extremists standing out against the collective wish of all reasonable people and "leaders of opinion". Just as De Klerk got South Africans to vote in their referendum, like turkeys for Christmas, to destroy their own civilisation and way of life and hand themselves over to Marxist savages.

Just as they would bribe, bully and brainwash Britons if they ever conceded a referendum here. In no case do they genuinely change the peoples' mind. In Britain the majority against Market madness that had existed before the referendum reappeared soon after it. Most White South Africans now rue the day they voted to the jungle. Already, opinion polls indicate that the Danes are having second thoughts. But they can deliver a vote their way on the day. Unless we are wise to what they are up to.

So the lesson is that anti-Maastricht campaigners here as in Denmark must not imagine that just because polls show that most of the electorate would vote against the wretched Treaty if a referendum were held that the same majority will vote "no" when one was held. But nor is it one of despair. The fight for Denmark's freedom was nearly won, despite the big battalions mustering to the other side. The fight for Britain's freedom in 1975 would have been won if those waging it had concentrated not on economic counters to the other side's economic case (on which they were to be proved right, too late, but which confused and bored the public at the time) but on a ringing patriotic call to the Flag and Freedom, to which the other side had no answer and which their memoirs reveal they feared above all else. Next time we must learn from the lessons of Denmark, South Africa and 1975. Next time, if the people are allowed to speak, we must ensure that they are not cowed into silence for the vital day but roused into a roar of patriotic fervour which steels their resolve to break asunder the chains with which Maastricht would bind them.
